POLICE OFFICE.—Attempted Robbery.—On Monday night, Mr. Ezra Huntington, clerk of Messrs. Dow, Craig & Dow, 72 Cortlandt street, went as usual to the store at 10 o'clock to sleep. After entering he discovered a man standing in the store and leaning on one of the desks, and responding the door he called to him to come out. The fellow affecting drunkenness came to the door, thrust Mr. H. aside and springing out, ran with all his speed down Cortlandt street to West, thence up to Washington street, and then to the Washington Market, where Mr. Huntington who had pursued, overtook and arrested him. He was handed to the watchman, and lodged in the watch-house, where he gave the name of Frederick Watson. Mr. Huntington returned to the store and discovered that the desk had been opened and a box of box of razors taken out, and the iron safe unlocked with the key which had been left in one of the pigeon-holes of the desk, evidently with intent to steal therefrom, though as yet none of the property had been removed. Yesterday Mr. H. made affidavit agains Watson at the Police, that he believed he had concealed himself in the store with intent to steal, and Watson was therupon committed to answer. Watson said he was drunk, was a native of Boston, resided in New-Jersey, was a carpenter by trade, came here to get employment, and ran away only because he was in a strange place and was frightened.

Stealing Money.—A man named James Robinson was lodged in the watch-house at 2 o'clock yesterday morning and subsequently sent to prison, charged with stealing a quantity of honey he had in his possession.

Stealing Clothing.—A man named Conant, who was arrested with a pilot cloth overcoat, a sailor jacket, and a heavy bed quilt in his possession, supposed to be stolen, and an owner is wanted at the Police-office for those articles. An owner is also wanted for a roll of hemp carpeting found on a thief, and supposed to be stolen.

Effects of Drunkenness.—A man named Ryan, of Elm-st, was yesterday arrested and committed for getting drunk and beating his wife. After he was committed the wife also went off and getting drunk, abandoned her infant about 6 months old in a state of nudity, and went no one knew where. A kind Irish neighbor who had the misfortune to be a little tipsy also found the child naked and crying with cold and hunger—and taking it in his arms and wrapping the skirt of his old great coat about it, carried it to various places to find its merciful mother, and finally conveyed it to the Police-office, where the poor little shivering creature was committed to the Alms House, whether it was conveyed by the kind-hearted though intemperate neighbor, and where it was clad, fed and placed comfortably in the care of a nurse.

Suit for Breach of Marriage Promise spoiled, and the Lawyer due out of his Fees.—On the 16th day of April last a young Pearl-street Miller named Jane _____ went to a gentleman of the bar and wished to employ him to commence a breach of promise of marriage suit against her defrauding lover. She accordingly made affidavit that her et de droit lover, George _____, a clerk in a cotton broker's office in Wall-street, had won her for nearly three years with the avowed intention of making her his wife. That she kindly received his attentions to the exclusion of all other advances, and that about seven months previous a reciprocal agreement was entered into to become husband and wife, and that the month of April of the present year was appointed as the period when the nuptials were to be solemnized in due form of law. That she went with George, her intended, about two months before and selected and hired a house, for them, as married people, to reside in; that furniture for it was procured and the wedding garments purchased, and at the instance of her lover, the friends of the parties were invited to hold themselves in readiness to appear and grace the nuptial feasts as their guests; but that on Sunday the 12th of April, George, the lover, came with views far different from those that have been stated, and bluntly informed his late lady-love that he could not marry her, as he was attracted to another who more completely engrossed his affections; and that he then left her and had not returned to redeem his plighted engagements.

Independent of this, which was sworn to before a commissioner, she stated that George, after the purchase of the furniture, had placed it in her possession, as he also had the linen for a number of shirts he had left for her to make; these he wished her to restore; but in the true spirit of an insulted maiden, she declared that she would break the furniture to pieces, and tear the shirts to tatters, rather than to see them again in his possession. As a matter of course they remained in her possession.

After this demonstration of spirit, she applied to the law as above stated, and wished him to commence suit against her treacherous lover for non-mentioning her by his nuptial to wed. A letter was written by the counsel to George on the subject, who sent a friend to her, requesting her not to prosecute. She, however, persisted, and resolved to let the law light upon her former admirer, and a writ was issued for him and damages laid at $5,000. She then returned to her home, reported proceedings, and at his instance agreed to settle the matter, and 'try out' if he would pay $200. She returned the next day, and he had been to visit her and expressed a belief that he would marry her if she would consent to be his. She returned again and informed her counsel that her lover had agreed again to marry her, and soon after the fates or the priest made them one—and the counsel heard that they were married. He then wrote a letter to her as Mrs. F. reminding her of her omission to pay him his fees and costs accruing on the indecent suit, but she replied with much sour froid, that she was not Mrs. F. but had become Mrs. G., and that he might go and whistle for his fees, and get them as he could; and the result of the whole matter is that the lady has obtained a husband through the instrumentality of the lawyer, and the lawyer has, by a marriage mauvaise, lost his fees, which il y a sous his feelings and his purse—and for which he will in all probability commence suit against the defaulting wife and husband unless they are speedily paid.
